

HIGHER SALARIES FOR CLERGY

By DR. C. G. CAMPBELL, President Eugenic Research Association.

CLERGYMEN have superior children and any proposal to increase the size of their families is promising eugenics. There must be a gradual deterioration in the general quality of racial stock unless remedies are adopted. It would be wise to increase clergymen's salaries for the proper rearing of such progeny. This contains the greatest promise of sustaining and increasing our most valuable racial stock.

With the continuance of present conditions of family limitation, a steady diminution in the proportionate ratio of the superior racial stocks from which leaders arise, and the gradual deterioration of their general quality and ability, is about as mathematically certain a prediction as could be made of future racial conditions.

The sole means of forestalling such a racial misfortune is by the increase of offspring in this superior racial stock, or positive eugenics.

We know from reliable factual data that the best quality of leaders rises, and rises in the greatest frequency, from the progeny of the clergy. Knowing these facts, it should not be difficult for us to see that any aid given to such a project would go to secure greater and more enduring human benefits than any other effort we could support.

This is a project which should strongly appeal to every individual who is racially minded. And it would seem particularly fitting that it should receive the ardent support of the sons and other descendants of the clergy.

CHURCH MUST KEEP STEP

By H. AUGUSTINE SMITH, Boston University.

Religion in a machine age must keep abreast of progress. As man has grown wings and soared to the sky in airplanes—so religion has outgrown its tendencies of yesterday.

Hymns which delighted the congregations of our fathers and mothers today lull us to sleep. A new era of hymnals is coming. The hymn of tomorrow will deal with aviation, the transmission of power, the creation of new, unknown wells of energy.

The early Crusaders went into the Orient to discover great wealth. They brought back from their oriental excursions tapestries, perfumes and ideas of grandeur. These they incorporated into that period, which became known as the Renaissance, and art took its place in religion.

Today, youth is upon a second crusade. A crusade in quest of youth, drama, beauty. The tingling things in life! It is thus that the church will keep step with the machine age and progress.

Yesterday the Crusader went to the Far East and songs of adventure were sung of him. Today, the Crusader goes up in his plane. We should have hymns dedicated to Commander Byrd and Colonel Lindbergh.

JUSTICE FOR JEW DEMANDED

By RABBI STEPHEN S. WISE, New York.

The "silent pogroms" are the feeling of anti-Judaism. They have resulted in the barring of Jews from certain banks, clubs and industries by overzealous Christians. The Jew who believes it a splendid thing to damn his own people and voice the feelings of his own race's persecutors deserves the strongest condemnation.

Missionaries working in Jewish fields are to be derided, for we do not sit in darkness—at least we do not think we do. If I were a Christian I should feel ashamed of the reaction of so much of the so-called Christian world to the anti-Jewish deeds wrought in Palestine a few months ago, even though this reaction be abetted or half-justified by the self-betrayal of a few outstanding Jews. The truth is that Christianity for the largest part has given its sympathy and good will to those who have warred against the Jews in Palestine rather than to the Jews who have been warred upon.

A terrible anti-Jewish ill will has been revealed by individual groups and journals, which have borne themselves as if Jews were ruthless invaders and despoilers of Palestine and slayers of its people.

PATRIOTS MUST LOOK FORWARD

By REV. HENRY DARLINGTON (Episcopal), New York.

Unless they look forward, instead of backward, patriotic societies may prove to be one of the most pernicious evils a forward looking America may have to contend with. The permanent future of our country today depends upon what you and I do in the generation in which we live, more than upon what was done by our ancestors from which we are benefiting at the present time.

If you have a vision of the future and are willing to act as your progenitors would have acted had they been alive today, you can do untold good. But if your eyes are set on the past and your thoughts dwell only upon what has been done, patriotic societies may then prove to be one of the most pernicious evils that a forward looking America may have to contend with. The times are charged with infinite possibilities for those who have the courage and vision.

The farewell address of Gen. Jan Christian Smuts, the South African statesman, convinced me that the great opportunity for this young country is to lead in a new era into paths of peace, and that it is the youth of the country who should assume leadership and, seeing the vision, carry on the torch.

FEW ABLE TO HANDLE MONEY

By DR. S. S. HUENNER, University of Pennsylvania.

Ninety eight people out of every hundred are "financially incompetent." Man has two great economic disabilities. One is his inability to continue his life; the other his inability to continue his substance.

Only one out of ten men at sixty-five has enough money to assure him an income of even $50 a month.

Only one out of three men who are healthy at thirty dies before he reaches sixty. The burden of support of the others usually falls on the children. This is terrible philosophy. Each generation should take care of itself.

WEST PARIS

Mothers Day was observed at the Universalist church by an impressive sermon by the pastor and music appropriate to the day. Mrs. Gertrude Redman of Bryant Pond with Mrs. Addie Mann, accompanist, and Sylvia Morgan sang solos very beautifully, and the altar was prettily decorated with memorial flowers.

Mrs. Edna Emery is caring for Mrs. Ernest Crocker and infant child and Mrs. Linwood Buck and baby. Mrs. Adney Tuell, who has also been cared for at the Emery home, is sufficiently recovered to return home.

Edna Mann and son Lewis were in Portland Saturday.

Mr. and Mrs. James Dawes of Mechanic Falls were calling on her uncle, D. H. Pielke, Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. L. H. Penley of Portland were guests Sunday of her mother, Mrs. Clara Bidlon.

L. H. Pielke is having the piazza on his home screened and other repairs made.

Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Chandler entertained their granddaughters Saturday night, Beatrice Forbes, daughter of A. D. Forbes of Bethel, and Elizabeth, daughter of Elden Garvey of Sumner.

Their parents came for them Sunday.

Daylight saving time has been quite largely adopted. The factories, schools, library and Universalist church are on that time. The United Parish will continue on standard time for the present, as the leader of the young people's choir, William Edmunds, has to attend to his duties at the station.

Rev. A. E. Roberts is the new pastor at the United Parish. Rev. George P. Smith was assigned to Naples and West Sebago.

The food sale held Wednesday afternoon by the ladies of the Universalist parish at Gammon & Martin's hardware store was a great success. For once the ladies outdid the men, netting over $17.00 from the sale against $12.50 cleared by the men the week previous.

Mrs. Gertrude Ladig and daughter Genevieve of Norwalk, Conn., were guests of Mrs. Ladig's girlhood friend, Mrs. S. T. White, Wednesday night.

May 7, The ladies were motoring to Millsfield, N. H., to spend the summer with Mrs. Ladig's father, Quincy Davis. They also called on cousins, Mrs. Jennie B. Dunham, and Mrs. Edwin R. Berry.

Mrs. Minnie Day has gone to Rangeley where she has employment at the Rangeley Lake House.

Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Hammond and Mrs. Farquar of Gorham, N. H., were recent guests of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Curtis.

Mrs. Ella Chute and daughter Ruth of Auburn were guests last week of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. T. Hollis.

Clayton Gammon, who has been ill for the past year from a fall on the ice which affected his eyesight, has recovered, and returned to his work at Keegan Falls.

Mrs. S. T. Hollis went to Lewiston Saturday to meet her daughter, Betty Hollis, who returns home weekly from Gorham Normal School.

Mr. George Robinson, who has spent the winter at Stoughton with her daughter, Mrs. Chaudron, and sister, Mrs. George Stone, returned home.

Mrs. Lena Scott Harrison came from Portland last week and visited with her mother in Emma at the Bethel home.

Mr. Martin from Norway was in the place Saturday, taking the census.

Mr. Bartlett and son from Middlebury were callers in this vicinity recently.

Mr. and Mrs. Leslie Whitman and family from Norway spent Saturday night and Sunday at their cottage.

Mr. and Mrs. Eichel from Shelburne were guests at D. R. Cole's Sunday.

Ray Martin visited with Lovell Chubbill at Mechanic Falls Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Gerald Robinson of South Bethel, Mr. and Mrs. William Morgan and family from Bryant Pond, and Mrs. Laura Seames and family were guests at D. R. Cole's Sunday.

Charlotte Cole visited with her grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Dunham, at Rowe Hill over the week end.

Mr. and Mrs. L. W. Cole and family and Mrs. Elsie Cole and family visited there Sunday.

Harry Tibbets from Mechanic Falls is a visitor in the place.

Mr. and Mrs. Ed Farr and family from West Poland, Mr. and Mrs. E. T. Roberts and family from Locke Mills, and Mr. and Mrs. Frank Waterhouse from West Paris visited at R. L. Martin's recently.

Fore Street, Oxford

Albert Thompson is doing quite a bit of gardening on his mother's place this spring.

Harry Twitchell is helping his father with his spring planting, also plowing for Ernest Mattor.

The Dismore people have had their telephone taken out. Mr. Dismore is working in Bath.

Mrs. Ernest Mattor and sister spent the day Friday in Lewiston shopping.

Rev. John Holman, the evangelist from Marblehead, Mass., who is holding a campaign at the Adventist Church in Oxford village, is staying at E. E. Twitchell's.

Last Friday evening there were 55 from the South Windham church at the meeting. Mr. Holman had recently held a campaign with that church.

Mrs. E. E. Twitchell and Chestina were at Mechanic Falls camp grounds last Monday getting their cottage in readiness for summer.

Mrs. James Wheeler of Oxford spent last Saturday with her sister, Mrs. Mildred Twitchell.

We understand John Greyer has sold his place here and is about to move to Bath.

Chestina Twitchell is helping out at Norway Pond stage at this writing.

All the neighborhood was saddened by the death of Mrs. Nettie Cummings last week. She was a woman loved by all who knew her and her family have lost with a big loss. She left an aged mother and eight children besides her husband and two grandchildren to mourn her loss.

Alvin Lovjoy's hot house is now in its usual summer glory. He is taking out one or two truck loads daily.

Bert Dainal has the same housekeeper this summer that he had last. She came last Friday.

Flora Cummings is still at Charles Cutler's, South Paris, caring for his mother who fell and hurt her knee six weeks ago.

about gasoline—he knows!

WHAT sells a new car? The impression it makes when demonstrated. That's why more dealers in New York and New England demonstrate their cars with Socony Special plus Ethyl than with any other motor fuel.

Your car, too, will always give "demonstration performance" if you use Socony Special plus Ethyl—the only premium gasoline sold in New York and New England to which Ethyl is added.

For years Socony Special was recognized as the best premium gasoline in its territory. Now the addition of Ethyl makes it the finest motor fuel that science has yet developed—explains why sales keep jumping month by month.

FRANCE PLACES HERRICK ON PAR WITH FRANKLIN

American Ambassador's Life Work Wins Highest Praise of Parisians.

Paris.—Four spontaneous movements among French and Americans to honor the memory of the late Ambassador Myron T. Herrick of Cleveland will make the Ohioan diplomat rank with Benjamin Franklin as the most honored diplomat the United States has ever sent to France. The first honor was the decision of the city of Paris to name one of its most beautiful avenues Myron Herrick, the only American ambassador or minister, with the exception of Franklin, who has been so honored. There are streets for Presidents Wilson, Washington and Lincoln.

Start Monument Fund.
The American and French admirers of Ambassador Herrick have started a fund for the erection of a statue near or at the beginning of the new Avenue Myron Herrick. Again Benjamin Franklin is the only other American diplomat who has a statue in Paris.

Ambassador Herrick's friends in Cleveland subscribed $50,000 for the equipment of an American Legion building which is only a stone's throw from the embassy where Herrick died.

Herrick's untiring work in founding and inspiring the American hospital in Paris commemorated by a memorial ward, which, although it was intended to honor the memory of Mrs. Herrick who worked herself to death nursing soldiers in the hospital during the war, is also a monument to the generosity of the people.

Without a doubt Benjamin Franklin and Myron T. Herrick were the most beloved American ambassadors who ever lived in Paris.

U. S. Great Medical Board for Air Pilots

Washington, D. C.—The medical board of the War Department has decided to set up a special aviation medicine division of the medical corps to keep army pilots in proper condition.

Among the occupational disabilities recognized by the board are flying sickness, impaired hearing and a condition caused by constant high altitude in which the body gradually becomes dehydrated.

A school of aviation medicine has been established at Brooks field, San Antonio, Texas, through which 60 flight surgeons already have passed. These medical officers attached to flying units must be constantly and several are qualified pilots. By regular contact with flyers' disabilities they become able to diagnose symptoms of conditions which would not be caused for alarm except to flyers.

The importance of physical fitness lies in the fact that the human element alone has retarded efforts to make flying safer. War department statistics show that 69 per cent of commercial flying accidents, 61 per cent of army accidents, and 74 per cent of navy flying accidents are due to pilot failures rather than mechanical defects.

Elis Poland is having very good success on the roads.

Graphic Outlines of History

THE HOME OF JOHN HOWARD PAYNE

In this weatherbeaten farm house at East Hampton, L. I., John Howard Payne wrote "Home, Sweet Home," one of the world's most famous songs. The house passed into the possession of a man named Buck, now dead, but his will makes no special provision for the structure, consequently it may soon go on the real estate market.

A characteristic of true service is simplicity. This is greatly evident in the services under our skilled direction.

City Grew as Visioned, but in Wrong Direction

In the early days of San Francisco, when it was a town of but 2,000 inhabitants, Richard Plindell Hammond, father of John Hays Hammond, the eminent mining engineer and capitalist, lived there. In fact, John Hays Hammond was born in the Golden Gate city in 1853. The elder Hammond, himself a surveyor, looked over the magnificent San Francisco bay and foresaw that a great city would rise on its shores. He saw with a surveyor's eye how the land lay. He visioned a great port of the future, mistress of the Pacific coast. So he proceeded to acquire certain holdings of land where he was certain the future city would stand. He surveyed it himself, laying out streets and demarking town lots. It was only a matter of waiting a few years. There in the harbor lay tall ships which had brought out gold-seekers and some which came from strange ports to trade. The day was not far distant when ships from all the world would lie in that harbor, thought Hammond.

Today, three-quarters of a century afterward, that carefully surveyed townsite is a mud flat, still vacant, save for an occasional shack of a fisherman. San Francisco has grown into the proud city Hammond foresaw, but on almost every bit of ground save that he selected as the inevitable site.

Tipling and Riots Put End to Morris Dancing

The Lancashire morris dancers who played up so well for their county in the folk-dancing festival in London would perform under social conditions vastly different from those of a century ago, for what really led to the decay of Lancashire morris dancing was the injudicious "treating" at each stopping place of the rushcart dancers, the brawls between rival teams and their supporters, and the riotous crowds assembled by the peasant, says a columnist in the Manchester Guardian.

"As drunk as a morris dancer," was a Lancashire saying. Alex Wilson's picture (1911) of a rushcart and morris dancers in Long Millgate, Manchester, in the midst of a riotous and rascally crowd, explains well enough why the custom was put down, the picture being given extra verisimilitude by the local characters introduced, including the celebrated Rev. Brooks, bewigged and with stick raised characteristically in wrath.

THE STORY

CHAPTER I.—Floyd Unwin, unusual in life's struggle, with his mind and his body, was a man of note, but not wealthy, taking his place with his college associates. Unwin was a written pledge which he had taken while in college, to that he needs financial assistance for the education of his son Bob.

CHAPTER II.—Bettington arranged his old friend Unwin by painting some pictures and selling them. Unwin, twenty years old, is Betty's private stenographer. He is a man of vast wealth, but a devotee. Calling at Gibbs's office, as arranged, Mary is asked by the financier to see her employer's business secretary, money. The girl refuses, and Betty, exhausted by dissipation, announces his intention of taking a holiday on the ocean, but is to be accompanied by a secretary and a wife. Mary Unwin as his secretary on the ocean, and her brother accompany them.

CHAPTER III.—Bettington, painting to Maine coast, is caught in a storm and seeks refuge in a shack owned by Jonathan Gibbs. Next morning, Betty's clothes being ruined by a storm, he dons an old coat and sets out to row to the nearest shore. On the way he is decaying and knocked overboard. Afterward being conveyed to a boat and kept by Gibbs and Betty. Betty's boat embarks and Betty assumes he is drowned. In Betty's clothes, Betty finds money. Gibbs goes there. He is a man from justice, and on a night, without cause, he endures a fire, the fire escape, but fails to go.

CHAPTER IV.—Betty's shack with an mind. The whole episode publicity to him, but he cheered with the hope that his guest had been rescued. In that case, he would soon be back at the shack.

By midnight Bettington did not know the things which were in the boat. There was a gold watch and initials H. B. on it. A wallet had almost four hundred dollars, were no letters. But there was a memorandum of a studio at a address and a receipt for the of it to the end of the current. And there was a bunch of keys.

Almost an hour Gibbs sat motionless. Then he rose to his feet, settled on the oil stove and preheated himself carefully and rubbed the which Bettington had applied shoes so carefully into the that it became at length flexible was able to put them on. He went to the door and looked at the torn trousers and asked him to wear them. With which had been little used of pressed them into something former shape.

He went to the door and looked at the torn trousers and asked him to wear them. With which had been little used of pressed them into something former shape.

CHAPTER VIII.—Betty's shack with an mind. The whole episode publicity to him, but he cheered with the hope that his guest had been rescued. In that case, he would soon be back at the shack.

By midnight Bettington did not know the things which were in the boat. There was a gold watch and initials H. B. on it. A wallet had almost four hundred dollars, were no letters. But there was a memorandum of a studio at a address and a receipt for the of it to the end of the current. And there was a bunch of keys.

"Wondering what I'm all dolled up for?" he demanded. "I'll tell you. We're going to have skirts aboard this trip. Metzger told me. There's a lady's maid, a secretary and the owner's wife. Metzger's seen her pictures in the paper. He's crazy over her."

"Who's Metzger?"

"The chief engineer. Lucky for him he don't like 'em as young as I do," said Sam, rolling his red eyes. "I'm all for the chickens. This secretary is some skirt from what I hear."

Bettington was incensed at the bestial glee of the recumbent man.

"Do you suppose," he said, looking at Sam with a disfavor that could be felt even by the sailor, "that any lady, secretary to the owner of this boat, would have anything to do with you? How will you have the chance to speak to the owner's guests? Don't be foolish, Sam."

Sam looked at him a long time in silence.

"I can see what you're driving at," said the sailor. "You want to find out what sort of a trip this is going to be. Well, you don't get nothing out of me." He laughed long and loud at what seemed to him his masterly discovery of the other's motives. Then he described his way of life and love. There was something nauseating in it. And there was something frightening, too. How did Sam, who berthed and messed with the crew, come to imagine, without good grounds, that he would have the opportunity to come intimately into contact with the owner's guests?

There was another disquieting thought. Suppose that he was kept a prisoner here until the boat put out to sea again and so forced to be a party to indescribable scenes? Escape was impossible. It was a steel-built boat; the porthole was a small one and his only weapon a safety razor blade.

He was thinking bitterly at noon on Monday, when, from his porthole, he saw a launch approaching the ship. He recognized it as the one which had taken him from Blackport to Bar Harbor. Beside the crew there were two men and two women. He had no time to take in their features because he was amazed to see that one of the men was none other than Tubby Unwin. The launch had passed his field of vision before he could recover from his surprise. With the aid of the mirror that Sam had brought with the shaving outfit Bettington could see that the launch was brought alongside. And from it, Unwin and the three strangers climbed aboard.

In vain Bettington shouted and kicked at the door. Steam was up, and the various noises and activities on deck made his outcry inaudible. Looking through his mirror he saw, presently, that Unwin descended the steps into the boat. Apparently he was not going. He was waving to some one on deck.

Unwin even threw kisses at the unknown. It seemed to Bettington that Unwin must hear his shouts before he drew away from the vessel. The launch was only a few yards distant at one time, before she put about and made for the shore. On the landing of the yacht club Unwin stood still waving. And so he stood until the ocean-going steam houseboat had turned her bow to the south.

Unwin went back to his wife very happy.

"It will be wonderful for both of them," he said. "Mr. Hadway was very pleasant, for a man in his position to one in mine. But she is a rarer and finer type. I am sure she is unhappy. She seemed to cling to our Mary. Bob doesn't know yet how he will like the men. He has the impression that his presence is resented, but, of course, that's all nonsense."

But Bob made no mistake in estimating the warmth of his reception. The forecastle resented him. "He's a spy," said Hammer.

"He's the girl's brother," volunteered a man from the engine room. "I heard Metzger tell Leary so."

"My girl's brother, is he?" Sam commented. "If she's nice to me, I'll be good to him." He beckoned Bob to him. Bob, anxious to do his best and make a good impression, came running up.

"Boy," said Sam, "what's your sister's name?"

Bob looked into Sam's eyes and his tongue withheld the answer that had been ready. Dimly he understood that the lecherous look and the question itself from such a source was an insult. He would show this broad, heavy, impudent sailor where he stood.

"My sister's name is Miss Unwin," Hammer uttered; he hated women and dimly foresaw in Sam's weakness some future trouble. But he did not utter when Sam slowly turned his head and looked at him. None better than Hammer knew for what reasons Sam never went ashore when he could avoid it.

"I'll talk to you later, Mr. Unwin," Sam mocked. "No and you'll have a little conversation of Cape May, where the light is."

Bob snarled at feeling that he had come face to face with more evil than he had ever known before. On the deck above his sister was; he had been told he must not venture there. Above that deck was the wire-interested. He had seen a cheery young man in uniform, who had been pointed out as the wireless operator. But between the two was a great gulf fixed. "Sparks" was an officer. Perhaps Bob had entered upon his new task with too great an enthusiasm. He found himself called upon to do certain greasy and oily offices usually performed by engine room help. Metzger, the chief engineer, swore at him violently when he began to ask questions about the engines. On the whole, he found himself, for the first time in his life, distinctly unpopular.

Barnegut light was in sight when Sam, at midnight, came into Bettington's cabin.

"The Boss says you can see him now," he growled.

Bettington followed him along a dim passage to the extreme stern of the vessel. Here he unlocked a door leading to a companion way which brought him to a quarter deck at the after part of the yacht. There were two big wicker chairs and a table. Sam motioned him to sit down. Then he knocked at a stateroom door and was hidden to enter.

"You're to go in," Sam said a few moments later. "I'll wait here."

It was not surprising that a certain emotion of excitement and, perhaps, apprehension seized upon the painter as he moved toward the door. What manner of ruffian was he to confront? And what was it that he had been predestined for? A man who could hold a turbulent and ferocious brute like Sam in thrall, would probably be one of greater power and violence than he.

Never, Bettington confessed, as he entered the stateroom, had his judgments been more at fault. This was no towering bully, no disciple of the strong-arm school of underworld aristocracy who looked at him. Apparently the man was of the same social class as himself.

The Boss was a little, slender man of delicate feature and limb. His face had that ivory pallor one associates with extreme old age. And yet, he did not seem to be an old man. He was smiling as Bettington entered; he smiled while he talked.

"I am afraid," said the Boss, after waving his guest to a seat, "that you have not enjoyed your voyage."

"I have not," Bettington returned. "I may tell you at once, that I resent the whole occurrence. It has been one outrage added to another. That they had their origin in a mistake I know very well, but the effect is just the same and I demand to be put ashore at once."

"We are provisioned for a year," said the Boss calmly, "and most likely shall not touch any port for one month."

"I shall," snapped the painter.

"I think not," the other corrected gently. "I expected you to make these protests. Sam has told me of your attitude and I admire it. The wise man differs from a fool in knowing just when to try to make terms. We are here to talk business."

"Look here," Bettington began, "explained to your first murderer out there, that there had been some mistake of identities. My name is Bettington; I am a painter of seascapes and my studio is on East Thirty-fourth street."

The Boss took from a small table a New York paper. "Did you have a pleasant dinner?" he asked suavely. He passed the paper over the table and pointed out an obituary notice tucked away in an obscure spot. "Read it," the Boss commanded.

Card of Thanks

I wish to extend to the people of Gilead my sincere thanks for coming here on my seventy-fifth birthday by giving me a party-greeting at the Town Hall on Saturday evening, the tenth of May. I also extend my thanks for the sum of money given me, also the lovely birthday cake and for the beautiful poem written for the occasion. I shall carry that in my memory the balance of my life as the happiest birthday, coming from my old town's people. Again I thank you one and all. Sincerely yours, A. J. BLAKE

Surprise Party

Mr. A. J. Blake was tendered a surprise party last Saturday night at the Town Hall in honor of his seventy-fifth birthday. The party was planned so that he had no inkling of the affair until he arrived at the hall and found over a hundred friends and neighbors were waiting to greet him. He was presented with a large sum of money as a gift from his friends. There were two beautiful birthday cakes made by Mrs. Ada Cole and Mrs. Ruth Proof.

At 10:30 all retired to the dining room which was prettily decorated and refreshments of ice cream and assorted cake were served. The evening was delightfully spent with music and dancing and a good time was enjoyed. All departed at a late hour wishing Mr. Blake many more happy birthdays. Following is a poem written by Mrs. Addie K. Mason of Bethel for this occasion and read by Charles Cole during the evening:

BIRTHDAY GREETINGS
To A. J. Blake, May 10, 1930
Just a band of friends and neighbors
Come to greet you here tonight;
Friendly faces all about you
Hope to make your birth night bright.

Many years you've lived among us
Helping all in kindly way;
We'll try to make you happy
On your seventy-fifth birthday.

Hard has seemed the road at times, sir,
Yet you've trod it firm and true;
Doing well each task before you,
Doing each and all their due.

As a townsman staunch and steady
You have given us your best;
And no matter what the problem,
You have always stood the test.

And with all our hearts we're wishing
For you many a glad birthday;
And along life's trail so winding,
We'll keep step with you all way.

Resolutions of Respect
Whereas, our Heavenly Father has permitted the Messenger of death to enter our midst and remove from us our beloved sister, Grace J. Merrill, who faithfully served as Chaplain of the order.

Resolved that the Sons of Union Veterans Auxiliary extend their heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved family in this dark hour of affliction.

Resolved that a copy of these Resolutions be sent to the family of our departed sister, that they be spread upon our records, a copy sent to the Oxford County Citizen for publication, and that our Charter be draped for thirty days.

Have there come to you dark days in your later life, days when you could hear no voice that gave you courage? It is upon such occasions that Christ would come to you, saying as He did of old, "I, I, be not afraid."
